Pride, Unity, and Excellence

April 6, 2018

To whom it may concern:

I am writing to enthusiastically recommend Steven Vang for the job you are offering. Steven is currently a student in the AP Calculus AB class that I teach. Steven is an outstanding young man with many excellent qualities.

Academically, Steven has high expectations for himself and he works hard to achieve them. He is very intellectually talented, and he is very skilled at problem solving and logical thinking. Steven has an aptitude for understanding challenging mathematical concepts rapidly with a depth of understanding. So far this school year, Steven has done very well on all of the chapter exams. Steven also has a solid work ethic. He consistently comes to class well-prepared with his homework assignments completed.

Personally, I have enjoyed getting to know Steven as a student. Steven works well with his peers and is able to maintain his focus on the task-at-hand without getting distracted. He possesses all the intellectual and interpersonal skills needed to become successful in a variety of academic fields, especially those involving STEM.

Steven has a unique combination of determination, intellect, and character, and he would be a valuable asset to anyone who employs him. I firmly believe he has both the intellectual capacity and the determination to become successful in whatever he sets out to accomplish. I highly recommend that you strongly consider Steven Vang for the job you are offering; his talent and work ethic will make him a fantastic employee.

Sincerely,
